

THE POLAR BEAR PARALYZED

Omaha Succeeds in Shutting Out the Minneapolis Boys.

IT WAS A MAGNIFICENT GAME.

Both Clubs Do Very Fine Work in Spite of the Cold in the Opening Contest for the Pennant.

First Blood for Omaha.

The championship season of 1888 has at last been opened upon the local grounds. The Omaha and Minneapolis teams succeeded in playing their initial game yesterday afternoon, and despite the fact that the recent copious rains had left the grounds soft and unreliable, and that the temperature was of an intensity that rendered heavy overcoats and fur collars necessary, the Omaha played a magnificent game—a game that is not likely to be duplicated in many a day. The Omaha held a caucus Sunday night and agreed upon a plan to Chicago the art explorers yesterday. Lovette was in the chair and the session was held with closed doors and the secret was well kept.

The wind was blowing razor-blades when the lumps from Minneapolis skipped upon the central field to induce in preliminary practice. They were full of hope and friskiness. They little suspected that the fox Omaha had set a trap for them.

But let us see how they fell in the trap. For strategy in the Omaha was retired gracefully, rather than making a tally, notwithstanding they succeeded in getting men on the bases in the second, third, fourth and sixth innings, and they were just as they were trying to make a run.

But they weren't—that was only part of their scheme to lead the unsuspecting Minneapolis on to believe that they could make them think they had a chance to win.

Remember, however, they kept killing off the red-legged heroes from the home of the polar bear as fast as they stepped up to the plate for just as many innings. The visitors seemed in great grief, while the Omahas were laughing in their sleeves.

Things were running just as they intended. The seventh inning came. This was the moment to spring the trap. Shannon, just to get of field to throw the ball, was agitated the air three times in succession and curled up in his buffalo. Then Doran stepped up, and the first ball Parsons sent at him he managed to square on the trade mark for a couple of bags.

The audience here warmed up in spite of the raw atmosphere. Then Doran came down to the plate on a passed ball, and trotted across the plate after Wilson's long fly had settled in Jevie's hands.

Omaha 1, Minneapolis 0.

Manager Gooding looked sad, so did his weary men.

Again the home team blanked their opponents, and were themselves whitewashed in the eighth. In the ninth, however, O'Connell, who played the whole game like a three-year-old, walked right up to the bat, and before Mr. Parsons knew what had happened the ball went flying over the right field fence, and O'Connell walked merrily round the bases and home, and an outburst of cheers from the frantic crowd.

The Minneapolis boys were dumfounded. No matter what they attempted they were foiled by the scholarship of the Omaha.

Two hundred spectators finally buttoned up their overcoats and went home in high spirits, for Captain Shannon and his untamed wilds had two men on the bases and an unbroken chain of large and juicy goose eggs.

The official scores will be found appended. It will give a clearer idea of this model game:

PARMELEE'S PETITION.

He Opens His Guns On the Base Ball Managers.

Edward A. Parmelee yesterday afternoon made good his threat of beginning action against the Omaha base ball association, by filing a complaint against Josiah S. McCormick, John J. Hardin, H. A. Worley, John M. Daugherty, John Morrison, John J. Philbin and Edward Brandt. Parmelee sets forth that he is the owner of a lot 29 in Midland and Caldwell's addition, and has erected thereon, at a large outlay, a private residence in which with his family he has been living for more than four years; that the defendants are lessees of property in the immediate vicinity that has been fitted up by them as a base ball ground, for which they are used frequently on Sunday and where large crowds of people congregate, arriving early in the morning of each Sunday, and indulging in vile and offensive language, so that the plaintiff is obliged to keep his family indoors, and is thereby deprived of the undisturbed comforts of his premises and home. The plaintiff further alleges "that what is known in base ball parlance as 'foul balls' are frequently hurled from said base ball grounds into his yard with such velocity that they threaten not only to break the windows in his house, but also endanger the safety of himself and family."

In conclusion, in his appeal for a perpetual injunction against the ball club, which will probably be argued next Saturday, Parmelee's petition says: "The public game are a constant annoyance and disturbance to him and his family, and deprive them of the peace, quiet, comfort and safety which they enjoyed prior to the erection of the grounds for the holding of games of base ball."

Sheriff Coburn was busy last evening making out notices and subpoenas to the defendants, and they will be served to-day.

Diamond Flashes.

Lovett struck out eight men.

The telephone has been put in at the grounds.

Omaha had no passed balls or wild pitches and only one man struck out.

The whole team played like machinery, and their praises last night were sung on all hands.

Lovett pitched a great game, besides watching the bases well, and fielding without an error.

There was no symptom of a kick. The game was one of the cleanest and best ever seen on the home grounds.

A change has been made in the schedule whereby the fifth inning was postponed at St. Louis June 20, 27, 28 and 29 will be played at Omaha.

Flynn's running one hand catch from Brosman's bat in the fifth inning was phenomenal exploit. The crowd cheered and yelled for fully three minutes.

A board walk is being put down along the entire south side of the park, and the small boy is forever barred from climbing over the fence by four strands of barbed wire.

The umpire's uniform is very handsome, and by the way, Fessenden is a fine looking fellow, as well as an excellent umpire. He allows no monkeying, and the players all seemed to have a wholesome dread of him.

Fessenden umpired and umpired superbly. When men are on bases he is in position within the diamond just back of the pitcher's box. He was prompt and invariably correct in his decisions, and gave perfect satisfaction to both teams.

If the Omahas play ball like they did yesterday they'll have a walk over. It should not be thought, however, that Minneapolis didn't play ball also, for they did and after a marvelous fashion. Jesse McQuinn and Patton cut off many a ball that looked good for three bags.

Wilson was not to be trifled with yesterday. As he was out on a steal second on line was sure dead. Only one successful steal was made off of him. He threw like a cannon.

ball, and his backstop work cannot be excelled. His one error, a wild throw, was excusable and cost nothing.

THE DE BAR TRIAL.

The Madam Insists She Comes Straight From Royal Stock.

NEW YORK, April 30.—[General] and Madame Diss De Bar, who were in their behavior to-day in the conspiracy case against them, "General" Diss De Bar admitted he had never been married to the madam, and that he had a wedded wife and family of adult progeny in Philadelphia; but he declared he had discharged his obligations to her and considered himself the madame's husband before God. Madame Diss De Bar, when sworn, declared herself to be the daughter of Lola Montez and the late King Ludwig of Bavaria. She was sent to this country when a child. The witness sketched her life in various countries and in numerous courts, and she said she never came to her when she was a child. She declared, genuine, and what she represented them to be, the work of her hands. She did not ask Marsh for a cent and was very much astonished when he gave her his house. The justice held her and her husband in $5,000 bail each for the grand jury.

Feasting Carl Schurz.

BERLIN, April 30.—A banquet was given at the Kaiser hotel last evening in honor of Carl Schurz. Count Herbert Bismarck, several members of the reichstag and other distinguished persons were present. Prof. Gheist, in proposing the health of Schurz, said as a popular orator, as a leader in the army of the civil war, as a senator and as a minister in a real administration, Schurz had always remained the same true man. Schurz replied briefly. The guests of honor were seated at the preservation of a friendly understanding between the German fatherland and the American people is dearer to German-Americans than anything else.

A Masonic Dignitary's Luck.

CHICAGO, April 30.—Charles A. Howard, of Milwaukee, a widely known Masonic dignitary, whose financial circumstances heretofore have been only moderately comfortable, was to-day notified by a lawyer here of a bequest left him of over $100,000 by an aunt, Mrs. Mary Howard, of Kent, Yorkshire, England, whom Howard supposed had disinherited him.

In Favor of the Buildings.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—The senate committee on public buildings and grounds, among others, ordered favorable reports on the following bills for public buildings: Duff, Minn., $150,000; Fort Dodge, La., $25,000; St. Paul, $1,300,000.

Sexton's Election Valid.

DUBLIN, April 30.—The court of queens to-day unanimously decided the election of Thomas Sexton as lord mayor of Dublin valid.

Opposed to the General.

MOSCOW, April 30.—It is authoritatively stated that the czar has expressed antipathy against General Boulanger.

Ancient Civilization.

AN EL PASO, TEX., dispatch to the St. Louis Globe says: Surveyors who are examining the route proposed for a railroad from Deming, in New Mexico, to Janos, in the state of Chihuahua, and from there to some point on the Pacific coast, have gone already as far as the old Spanish presidio of Janos, which is in the midst of the wild Sierra Madre of Mexico, one of the least known districts of North America, and have discovered the ruins of an ancient civilization of which no authentic record has come down to the present day. In a canyon which was passed through by the surveying party, a succession of dwellings were encountered, each of which, although built at different times, yet presented a form, one above the other, with solid masonry unlike the crude and pigny-like cliff-dwellers of Arizona and New Mexico. The dwelling had more the appearance of regular structure, being built each other on the shelving declivity of the canyon, and being difficult of access, as if it had been done for purposes of defense against powerful enemies. Most of the buildings had their front walls constructed of heavy stones carefully fitted, while the rear portions are built into the sides of the canyon. All of these ruins are in a remarkable state of preservation, so much so that they deserve more the name of abandoned dwellings than of ruins.

For this canyon is passed and the open country reached, an isolated mountain of symmetrical proportions is reached, on the summit of which the ruins of a gigantic stone structure are encountered, the appearance of which indicates that it was either a temple or the palace of a king. A portion of these ruins consist of a very hard concrete. At the foot of this mountain are substantially constructed terraced structures, plainly showing the existence in former times of an extensive system of irrigation and storage of water. The country for many miles in all directions contains stone relics, such as molars or stone tables, with appropriate pestles for the grinding of maize, stone hammers, various kinds of stone tools, and other articles, bronze tools of such extraordinary hardness and temper that they are equal to modern steel tools. Wherever the ground is turned up these relics are found in unfailing abundance. The neighboring hills show the same thing, and the belief is that the king of the Montezuma lived on the top of that mountain, but at what time and what his name was they did not know.

Private Theatricals.

The passion for private theatricals, says the Chicago Journal, has never been so strong in certain circles as it is just now, and it is a common sight on public conveyances to see young people of either sex with their noses buried deep in thin, closely printed books, that the initiated know contain the play that is for the time being under study. A young man thus engaged, as a rule, endeavors to conceal his occupation from his fellow passengers, he fixes his eyes closely on his page before him, and does not allow his lips to move. Not so the girl of the period, however. She makes no pretense of concealment. At intervals of the minutes her bright eyes are raised from the book and the speech just committed to memory is mumbled forth in an often quite audible undertone. If she has a companion with her the other occupants of the car are fortunate, for it is to be seen that she will be entertained with a treatise of the past triumphs and future aspirations of the "club" of which the fair student is a member with a glowing description of the student's "part" and the gowns that are to grace it through in. By the time her street is reached half the other ladies in the car are sneering superciliously, and all the men are wishing devoutly that they were going to appear in the play.

WHITNEY AND THE STANDARD.

Mr. Cannon Intimates That the Secretary is Connected With the Great Monopoly—The Internal Revenue System.

House.

WASHINGTON, April 30.—The house went into committee of the whole on the tariff bill and was addressed by Mr. Grosvenor of Ohio. It was strange, Mr. Grosvenor said, that the democratic party, led by that amateur statesman, the president of the United States, suddenly has become the champion of the internal revenue system. For twenty years the republicans have been the champions of internal revenue, but had opposed all efforts of the government to enforce the law and has so thoroughly educated the people of the south into the belief that the system was tyrannical that they had built up a great sentiment in the south that to defeat and violate and destroy that system by fraud and violence and bloodshed was murder, but the associates of the God-given right of rebellion against the tyrannical enactment of a tyrannical government. Now the democratic party, directed by the message of the president, ordained that the most sacred monument of taxation in this country was now to be in the future, the internal revenue system.

Discussing briefly the speech of the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Grosvenor said that the gentleman undertook to put republicans who favored the repeal of the internal revenue law into the category of being in the front ranks of the rebellion against the God-given right of rebellion against the tyrannical enactment of a tyrannical government.

Regarding the tariff, he said, the mission of statesmen was to see that the laboring man of this country should have a great deal higher wages than the laboring man of other countries. The prosperity of the country had not with no check on the tariff. The disaster which was threatened by the Morrison bill would be the ruin of the country. He called on the republicans to take the place of the general government.

At last the time arrived for the company to start on their tour of inspection and a man passed middle-age announced that he was ready to escort us. He was a model Frenchman, with just the airs and graces and the facility to strike imposing attitudes, which marks the nation as a class. He called our attention to a large banner of velvet, with rows of medals in silver and gold, explaining that there was a course in MUSIC AND ENGLISH free to employees, and that these rewards were given to the employees at the end of the year. The professor in English names the best scholars, and they are sent to England to remain six months, in order to perfect themselves in the language, their expenses being paid by the establishment. This may account for the number of clerks who speak English. The Frenchman told us that Maillard, the American confectioner, first gave him the idea of showing the public the entire store, by sending a card, asking him to escort some American ladies through the establishment. The company we joined numbered thirty-six, but were not noticed passing through the long galleries, already so crowded.

We came to a room entirely lined with mirrors, and small tables, covered with green cloth, was all that could be seen. In a moment the heavy curtains were drawn and darkness prevailed, when much to our surprise, the leader pulled a cord, and numerous gas jets were kindled, and the room was brightly placed behind them. We soon found that here

EVERY SILK WAS SHOWN and the mirrored walls gave an opportunity to the fair sex to select the most becoming material. This may account for the number of clerks who speak English. The Frenchman told us that Maillard, the American confectioner, first gave him the idea of showing the public the entire store, by sending a card, asking him to escort some American ladies through the establishment. The company we joined numbered thirty-six, but were not noticed passing through the long galleries, already so crowded.

At the last concert noted singers from the grand opera offered their services, but usually the performers are restricted to employees, and the cards of admission are given to their friends. There are at present 3,300 employees in this establishment, and as all breakfast and dine on the upper floor

THE KITCHEN AND DINING-ROOMS are most interesting to visit. The cooks, twelve in number, wore long, white aprons and caps. The stove was fully eight yards in length and proportionately wide, and was covered with immense soap and vegetable cauldrons, for the dinner was well under way. The bill of fare consisted of soup, meat, one vegetable, salad and wine. There were four immense machines, one to cut carrots, another to prepare potatoes, and a third to mash onions, while the fourth was used to slice bread for soup. Their escort stopped, and taking a handful of thin slices, dropped them one by one, saying they much resembled tortion lace. At the sides the cooks were busy cutting the meat ready for the grill, which holds 200 chops at a time, and besides it was an ingenious invention for frying potatoes. A sack of them were thrown in at one end, and
